A second release of Man of Miracles substituted this with "Best Thing", a song also contained on the first Styx album from 1972, as the opening track on side two. The album was again reissued in 1980 with new artwork and a newly abbreviated title, Miracles. This version started the second side with the ballad "Unfinished Song", which is sung by ...

Man of Miracles - Wikipedia

It is revealed that Creator/Man of Miracles is, in fact, the one who walked among mortals as " Jesus Christ," and thus was actually independent of God in the Spawn universe. The twelve heavenly warriors known as the Disciples, formed from the souls of the Twelve Apostles, actually follow Man of Miracles above God.

List of Omnipotent Beings

It's never established that the Man of Miracles is omnipotent, and there's plenty of evidence to contradict the proposition that he could be. M.O.M. told Spawn directly that he/she is the Creator of the Universe and the Destroyer of Worlds. "There is No Power Greater than Me". He/she was the Supreme Being of Image Comics.

Hi, a relative of mine think that the healing miracles of Jesus and most of what he did in his public life are just allegories to tell stories of spiritual matter. Like when Jesus heals a blind man, he thinks that Jesus opened his eyes spiritually... But he believes that Jesus is God. Could you help me to respond to such a claim ? Thanks.

But that's man's fate in this world, and that's how Schopenhauer saw this world. Let me read to you what he said. This is an essay that he wrote. It has kind of a long title. The name of the essay is "Transcendent Speculation on the Apparent Deliberateness in the Fate of the Individual." I'll translate that for you into German.

I thought I would start a thread by explaining the view of a non-believer about miracle claims and what would need to be demonstrated to convince me. First, there is the question of what a miracle claim would convince me of, since a miracle could be done (some say) by another god, or a demon. For the sake of this discussion I will say that I would presume, after seeing evidence of an actual ...

Miracles may express God's love to an individual, as in a miraculous response to a personal prayer. Or they may validate a religious message or the divine authority or holiness of a person by showing God's power operative in that person, as the miracles of Jesus did. In either case, miracles point to the transcendent God as their cause.

John calls this and other miracles a "sign." A sign is something that identifies or indicates. The Greek word he uses is semeion, "a sign or distinguishing mark whereby something is known; an event that is an indication or confirmation of intervention by transcendent powers," according to a leading Greek-English lexicon. Jesus performed this ...
